Certificate III in Business (Customer Engagement)

Traineeship

What is a traineeship?

Traineeships are a government initiative providing employees the opportunity to combine working with the completion of a nationally recognised qualification. Traineeships provide an employer a way of achieving a high-level workforce, promoting staff retention and offer a point of difference when recruiting new staff. Financial incentives may be available to employers to support the completion of the traineeship.

Traineeships can take between one and two years to complete and offer a wide range of qualifications over a variety of industries. New workers and existing workers may be eligible, and you may even complete a traineeship whilst still at school.

Qualification overview

This nationally recognised qualification will provide the skills required to succeed in a variety of customer-facing roles, including receptionist, customer service representative and administration assistant. It will equip employees with the skills to provide exceptional customer service, manage customer complaints, and confidently advise on products and services. They will apply a broad range of competencies using discretion, judgment and relevant theoretical knowledge.
